Richard Halliburton's Roads to Adventures

Richard Halliburton was a swashbuckler in a tailored suit. He was a best-selling author, Princeton graduate, world traveler and a contemporary of such well-known figures as Charles Lindbergh and Amelia Earhart, adventurers in their own rights. Like Earhart, Halliburton vanished somewhere in the Pacific after setting out on one of his many adventures. Unlike Earhart, Halliburton is all but forgotten.

Early in a lifetime that was filled with adventures Halliburton wrote, "I want freedom to indulge in whatever caprice strikes my fancy, freedom to search in the farthermost corners of the earth for the beautiful, the joyous and the romantic." And indeed he did find the freedom to cram his brief life with unusual journeys, unusual accomplishments, accolades from his admirers and scorn from his critics, some of whom believe that Halliburton's achievements were sometimes fictional.

Halliburton's travels began when he was a young man growing up in Memphis. At the age of 19 he wandered England and France after working his way across the Atlantic on a freighter.

Determined to finance his wanderlust by writing about his adventures, Halliburton embarked on other travels, including a trip down the Nile. He spent a night atop the Cheops, the famous pyramid, climbed the Matterhorn and battled snow and ice to reach the summit of Mount Fuji. He wrote of these adventures in Royal Road to Romance, his first book, which sold well.

The success of his book fired Halliburton with the desire to travel even more and to seek out unusual experiences wherever he went. His curiosity was unbounded, and his nerve to attempt the impossible was astonishing.

He hid on the grounds of the Taj Mahal when groundskeepers locked the gates in late afternoon. When darkness fell Halliburton took a moonlight swim in the pool in front of the tomb.

He followed the route of Ulysses in Homer's Odyssey, taking time to swim the Hellespont as Lord Byron had done before him. He later wrote of these adventures, and retold the stories when he took to the lecture circuit in search of income to pay for future trips. His appearances on the speaker's platform were wildly popular, and his sponsors were soon paying him $900 a week for his lectures.

Halliburton swam the length of the Panama Canal, watched over by escorts who stayed beside him in a small boat. They shot three alligators along the way, newspaper reports said.

The swim through the canal in 1928 garnered much publicity. The public was fascinated by Halliburton's passage, especially when it was revealed that he paid a toll of 36 cents. The toll was based upon his weight, which was about 150 pounds. Photographs show Halliburton as a minuscule figure, swimming in the middle of the great Gatun Lock as he headed toward the Pacific Ocean.

The end of Halliburton's adventuresome life came in 1939, when he was just 39 years old. He attempted to sail a Chinese junk from Hong Kong to San Francisco. In the middle of the Pacific Ocean, 19 days out from Hong Kong, Halliburton hailed a passing steamer with a brief radio message that ended with these words: "Wish you were here instead of me."

Except for one short radio transmission describing the boat's position, Halliburton was never heard from again.
